

Pulga

The word in Spanish means “flea.” At one time this was a populous mining settlement at the mouth of Flea Valley on the Feather River known as Big Bar. When the Western Pacific Railroad was built, the company discarded the original name and applied the more delicate Spanish designation for flea, probably because of the station’s geographical location.